

Simulation Norms:

1. Above all else, be respectful of classmates and other people relevant in the negotiations.
2. Feel free to critique actors and countries, but do so respectfully and base critiques in data and evidence.
 - a. Do have fun and be silly representing your actors, but do so while maintaining respect for them as people. (They are real people!)
3. Recognize that classmates may be portraying an actor-interests do not align with their personal views. Do not assume that classmates are sharing their own opinions, and do your best not to take these negotiations personally.
4. If you feel like your actor might be deceitful, there is no requirement to be honest with other actors.
 - a. Keep in mind respect (Norms 1 and 2) for your classmates, different countries, and actors represented if you take advantage of incomplete information.
5. Share space and time
 - a. Not only Lead Negotiators should be in the conversation/directing the conversation.
 - b. Lead Negotiators should direct conversations in national meetings, but should use this role to ensure all subnational voices are heard.
 - c. All voices should be heard during committee meetings and drafting.

Technical Details/Simulation Rules:

1. You can negotiate outside of class time (in fact, we encourage it!)
2. All votes require at least a simple majority (51%) to be approved. This rule applies in both the international context and the domestic context.
 - a. If an action/candidate/policy does not win at least 51%, a runoff election between the two items/candidates with the most votes will determine the outcome.
 - b. Similar runoff processes will be held for potential three-way ties.
 - c. Exception: Committee appointments can be approved with a 50% vote. Each actor must serve on a committee (i.e., you can't prevent someone from participating in drafting).
3. At the beginning of the simulation period, all participants will elect a chair. This person will serve as the chair for full official (i.e., in class) convenings and oversee voting in the international context.
4. Role of the chair: The chair has the power to set the agenda, the time limitations for discussions, end discussion sessions, and will oversee votes.
 - a. The chair introduces each item to be voted on: they may determine that not every item brought to their attention will be voted on, and may introduce items to the agenda they are personally interested in.

- b. Agenda setting does not apply to committee appointments nor the Final Treaty Vote. (There will be a committee and committee-appointments for each major draft section, and the Final Treaty Vote will proceed as outlined below.)
 - c. The Chair may vote in the Final Treaty Vote. The Chair also determines the order in which Lead Negotiators vote.
5. Final Treaty Vote:
- a. L1 Game: Lead negotiators will vote to approve or reject the final draft of the treaty. Voting parties may also abstain from voting.
 - b. L2 Game:
 - i. If the treaty is approved...
 - 1. Countries who voted in favor of the treaty in L1 will have their subnational actors vote to ratify the treaty, or not. Each actor can vote to approve, reject, or abstain. Lead negotiators may not vote, except in the case of a tie.
 - a. If the subnational vote approves the treaty, the country is a signatory to the treaty and participates fully.
 - b. If the subnational vote rejects the treaty, the country is not a signatory and does not participate in the agreement.
 - 2. Countries whose Lead Negotiators voted to reject the treaty do not vote in L2. Their country(ies) do(es) not participate in the agreement.
 - ii. If the treaty is rejected...
 - 1. The treaty fails. No country participates in the agreement.
 - 2. No vote is held in L2.
